ABOUT THE SYMPOSIUM

The role of monetary and financial sector policy in overall economic management in any matured economy has been gaining increasing importance and attention. In India, particularly during the post-reform period, monetary policy and the financial sector policies witnessed significant transformation which facilitated greater market orientation. Correspondingly, the performance of monetary policy in India during the post-reform period was largely satisfactory in terms of delivering high and stable growth along with low and stable inflation. The financial sector, including the dominant banking sector also significantly contributed to facilitating high economic growth with its phenomenal performance, as reflected in various performance indicators capturing volume, efficiency and productivity. In the recent period, the issues related to money, banking and financial markets have assumed the centre stage with contemporary importance. With gradual transformation of the monetary policy framework, the RBI had formally adopted the 'Inflation Targeting' since 2016.

In the banking and financial sector, there are many contemporary issues which are widely flagged for debate and deliberations. For instance, the incidence and overhang of high NPAs in the bank and capital constraints of the PSBs are widely believed to constrain the bank credit flow, and hindering the ability of the banking sector to support economic expansion. Similarly, there are several issues in the capital market and insurance sector, which needs adequate research and policy action. Last but not the least, there has been perennial concerns about the scope for financial inclusion, as the formal finances including banking are yet to reach a large section of rural poor.

In this backdrop, the Department of Economics, Pondicherry University envisages to organise a 'National Level Symposium on Money, Banking and Finance' to provide an effective platform to debate and deliberate on the above contemporary issues in the Indian context, by inviting eminent economists and experts from eminent academic institutes, financial sector regulators (RBI and SEBI) and financial institutions.
